Introduction to Orofacial Pain

Speakers: John Orsi, DMD, PhD / Kenneth Moore, DDS

John Orsi D.D.S. is a 1983 UOP graduate with a private dental practice in Sacramento. He received advanced training through mini-residencies in both Sleep Medicine at UCLA and Orofacial pain at both UCLA and Rutgers School of Dental Medicine, New Jersey. In 2013 he completed a one-year preceptor in the Orofacial Pain program at UCLA Dental School after which he received a two-year board certification process in orofacial pain while maintaining his private practice in Sacramento. He is a guest lecturer and clinical floor instructor for the UCLA graduate program in orofacial pain.

Kenneth E. Moore graduated from UCSF in 1982 and is a general dentist and an Orofacial Pain specialist in Roseville, California. Dr. Moore is the Associate Director of the UCLA Orofacial Pain and Sleep Medicine post-graduate program. He is also the co-director of both the TMD/Orofacial Pain and the Integrative Medicine/Dental Acupuncture mini-residency programs at UCLA. Dr. Moore has attended various continuums at the L.D. Pankey Institute, Spear Institute, Kois Center, and the Dawson Academy.

Course synopsis: An introduction to orofacial pain. Neuroanatomical and molecular pain mechanisms will be reviewed revealing practical ways to avoid both acute and chronic pain for our patients in the practice of dentistry. Figuratively we will show you how to blow out a match, rather than struggle to stop a forest fire.
